About Wayne Ulanski

A lyricist at heart, Wayne has been writing songs for his entire life. Topics include: Love and Loss (You Got to Love Her), Social Commentary (Why War?), Observations (Ironic), Celebrating Life (Cervesa con Lima) and a range of other song-worthy issues.

As a “full-time hobby” his commitment to songwriting served to keep him focused during his professional life while soothing the nagging desire to remain involved in his life dream – music.

To showcase his work, he has posted his catalog of albums on the Reverb Nation \(website\)

The site has categorized his styles and includes: Pop, Ballads, Rock, and his new album, Stratosphere

Some of the many positive comments about his songs has inspired this attempt to reach key decision makers in the industry.

Once asked about his approach to songwriting, Wayne commented;

“Songwriting is a craft that requires work every day. Each writer must develop his own approach and process for creating. Like, ‘What’s First?’ Title, melody, lyrics? That’s all up to the songwriter. But one bit of wisdom I often share is, if you want to write one hit song you must compose one hundred. For me, I most often hear something that gets the juices flowing and then I build from there. Sometimes the melody drives the lyrics, and sometimes the lyrics drive the melody. Ultimately, just follow your heart and let the song evolve as your ideas are expressed. It’s about Trusting yourself”
